

Two Ways to Shorten the Journey to DID Healing

The Primary Identity Approach provides a way to shorten the healing of dissociative dynamics in a significant manner in comparison to the traditional, alter-centered approach. It is based on differentiating primary identities (those protected from the trauma) and alter-identities (those who helped to deal with the trauma). While alters are not ignored, identifying and resolving the intolerable psychological conflicts of the primary identities brings healing to them and all of the alters formed as a result of their conflicts at the same time, often bringing spontaneous integration.

The Prenatal Healing Process provides a way to discover and address the major spiritual bondages established by one's ancestors or in the womb for those born into generational Satanist bloodlines. The process also bypasses many of the dynamics in a ritual abuse system that are designed to impede ministry. When the bondages are specifically rejected and renounced by one of the main primary identities, the expression of their free will trumps the decisions of their ancestors and those of the other identities, including the cult-loyal ones. By removing spiritual bondages at their prenatal roots, everything that resulted from them throughout the person's life can be removed all at once.
